I found that a big advantage of MAP-Works was having several other people who were involved that I could talk to about the students’ needs and progress and who helped me keep track of those students by following up with them or with me. Having several other concerned adults that attempted to make contact with the student encouraged students to respond. Additionally, I found it useful to know if the students had any other referrals, or if my class was the only one in which they were struggling. Knowing this information helped me determine how much help a student might need to turn things around.

- Robyn Kondrak 2014

The “M ost helpful faculty and staff” list was extracted from 2014’s MAP-Works student survey responses. Every effort was made to include all student responses indicating faculty or staff. Please forgive any accidental omissions or misspellings.

- Appalachian State University MapWorks Team

Overall, the MapWorks data offers insights into where students are during first semester and that might not otherwise be revealed until the course is nearly completed. I found that it cleared up some preconceived notions about my students and allowed me to tailor my course to where students actually were in the learning process.
